Causes of Family dispute from the "family members' perspective "applied study in al-Balqa applied university"

Abstract

This study aims at investigating the social, psychological, economic, and health factors that motivate family disputes from sons and daughters' point of view. This study also draws attention to some social and demographic reasons that the subjects think they are determining in the study. A sample of 250 subjects -3%- were randomly selected from different colleges in campus. Researchers use SPSS, T-test and F-test to investigate the significance of the findings in the study. The researcher found that the psychological factors play a major role in the family dispute development -19.56%- followed by the social factors -16.18. On the other hand, both the health and economical reasons showed some similar ratio of about 13.20% and 13.64% respectively. with some implications to differences attributed to place of residence and gender factors of significant ratio of $\alpha 0.05$.

Key words: family dispute, family conflict, family harmon